

Editorial

Until now, Cogency has not published work on the psychology of reasoning. We make up for that in this current issue. Two papers cover the area, analyzing core problems widely referred to in the standard literature of the psychology of reasoning. The editorial team is pleased to be able to contribute to this ongoing discussion. In the regular section of this issue, rhetoric, epistemology of disagreement and the argumentative approach to the problem of deep disagreement, and a specialized discussion on how to reconstruct metaphor in argumentative discourse are discussed. In the book review section, a detailed review suggests how to link the topics that the book reviewed proposes.

And now for some good news: Cogency from now on will be part of the main worldwide philosophy index, The Philosopher's Index. This is an achievement of the whole team of Cogency. We are still working on adding Cogency to other index systems. We hope that, slowly but surely, Cogency will be included in these indexes.

We would like to thank all the scholars who have contributed to Cogency with their reflections and interest which have made this step forward possible.
